

ID: SOMA-M-T05B-P14

Title: Letting Go (Variation B) with Body Scan

Timing Audit:

- Total Duration: 12m 00s (959 words; 183 Intro + 11 Bridge + 765 Practice)
- Intro + Bridge: 2m 00s (194 words; 183 words + 11w Bridge)
- Practice: 10m 00s (765 words)
- Silence: 130s total (2 Long, 6 Short, 1 Final)

Readability: Grade 5

Script Content:

[Intro]

Welcome to this practice. Today we will explore Letting Go.

We often hear that we should "let go." But we rarely learn how to do it. We often think it means pushing things away or getting rid of them. But in this approach, letting go simply means stopping the fight.

Imagine you are in a river. The water is moving fast. If you try to stand still and hold onto a heavy rock, the current hits you hard. Your muscles get tired. You are fighting the water to stay in one place. This is what we do with our stress. We hold onto it. We fight the current of our lives.

Now, imagine you let go of the rock. You lift your feet. You lie back in the water. The water is still moving. The river hasn't changed. But now, you are moving with it. You are floating. The struggle is gone. Letting go is the choice to stop holding onto the rock. It is the choice to trust the flow. We allow our experience to carry us, moment by moment, without sinking.

[Bridge] Now, we will move into a short practice to explore this.

[Practice]

When you're ready, let's begin this practice.

For this session, you are invited to bring awareness to the body. You may sit or lie down choosing any position that supports steadiness and comfort. You can adjust your posture at any time. If you need to pause the practice or end it early, you are free to do so.

There is no goal to reach, nothing you must feel, and no specific state you need to achieve. Sensations may be vivid or faint. Thoughts may come and go. Emotions may appear in passing. All of this is part of the experience.

This practice is not meant to change the body. Instead, we simply observe the body as it is. We notice when the mind gets tight, or tries to push feelings away. We are simply noticing what is happening right now. We meet the body with patience and interest. We allow whatever is here to be here.

[Short Pause] (10s - Settling in)

When you're ready, sensing the body as a whole. Feel the support beneath you, the weight of the body, and the quiet presence of being here. Now bring the attention to the left foot. Noticing pressure, temperature, tingling, steadiness, or the absence of clear sensation. Allow the experience to unfold without needing it to feel any particular way.

[Short Pause] (10s - Left foot focus)

Gently moving awareness into the lower left leg, sensing the calf, shin, and the spaciousness around them. You may notice texture, subtle movement, or quiet. There is nothing to correct or refine. Shifting attention into the upper left leg, the thigh, the muscles that support you, the weight this area carries. Sensations may be steady or shifting, strong or faint. Each is part of the landscape of the moment.

Letting awareness pour across the hips, feeling the transition out of the left leg and into the center of the body. This area may feel grounded or muted, active or still. There is room for all of it.

[Long Pause] (20s - Transition to right side)

Now guiding attention down to the right foot. Notice the contact with the surface beneath you. You might feel a pulse. Or you might just feel that the foot is there. You do not need to adjust anything.

Moving awareness up through the lower right leg, sensing the calf and shin. If sensations shift, soften, or remain indistinct, the practice is simply to stay present with whatever is here. Then into the upper right leg, sensing the strength or quiet of this region. You might notice warmth, heaviness, or the simple outline of the leg.

From here, letting awareness return to the hips and pelvis, sensing weight, pressure, subtle movement, or stillness. You may notice that this area forms the base of the torso, providing support without demanding attention.

[Short Pause] (10s - Lower body integration)

Shifting awareness into the lower belly and lower back. Sensations may ride on the breath or remain quietly in the background. There's no need to label or evaluate. This is an invitation to give experience space to arise and pass, one moment at a time.

Gradually moving into the chest and upper back. If the breath is noticeable, follow it gently, as though accompanying its movement rather than guiding it. Let sensations expand and settle naturally, arriving and leaving without pressure.

[Short Pause] (10s - Torso awareness)

Bringing attention down the left arm, upper arm, elbow, forearm, wrist, and hand. Noticing temperature, contact, or the subtle flow of sensation. You might feel nothing at all in some places; this too is part of the practice. Then moving across the shoulders, sensing breadth, weight, or ease. Allow these areas to be exactly as they are.

Guiding awareness down the right arm, sensing each region in turn. You may notice tingling, warmth, texture, or simply the shape of the arm in space. The practice is to accompany whatever is present without trying to shape it.

[Short Pause] (10s - Arms and Shoulders)

Bringing attention to the neck and throat, noticing how they respond to breath and posture. Then gently to the head, jaw, mouth, eyes, forehead, scalp. Sensations may shift, brighten, dim, or remain still. The mind may want to hold on or resist; this is one of the places where releasing that impulse can offer ease.

[Short Pause] (10s - Head and Face)

Now widening awareness to include the entire body, sensing the whole field of experience at once. Some areas may be vivid, others quiet, and some undefined. All of them belong. This opening is one expression of releasing the habitual need to manage every sensation.

[Long Pause] (30s - Whole body "floating")

You can return to this awareness whenever you choose. Even short moments can help you feel steady. They remind you that you do not need to react to every thought or feeling.

[Pause] (20s - Final integration)

Thank you for your practice.

Footer: License: Licensed under CC BY-NC-SA 4.0 (Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike). This material is part of the SOMA Architecture and is free for non-commercial research use; any adaptations must be shared under identical terms. How to Cite: For the most current citation, DOI, and project updates, please visit the SOMA OSF Repository (<https://osf.io/2kfvz>). Version 1.0 (March 2026) – Script N: Letting Go/ Body Scan.